I am looking to do this in Java, but I'd also be interested in something to do it in PHP. The reason I want this, is because I am going to be sending variables to another page via GET or POST. I am creating a page that will be used to edit or create a feed, so I want the feed text to be in the form of html text instead of just html text. A: There is a str_replace function, which will do what you want, and it can be used to do the reverse if you want to: test; echo str_replace('&', '&', $data); ?> Your wish is exactly what php's htmlspecialchars() is for, that's why it's included in the PHP standard library. Use it like this: What's in my bag? I'm a compulsive journaler so when I need some inspiration, I like to jot it down. Here's a list of my essentials to help inspire you on your own creative journey.
